

Solid red light on greenworks battery charger

What does the red light on the GreenWorks Charger mean?

The red light on the GreenWorks charger indicates that the battery is either warm or not charging properly. If the red light stays on, allow the battery to cool inside the charger for up to 30 minutes. Charging should start automatically once the battery cools.

Why does my GreenWorks Charger flash red?

When someone puts a battery on their Greenworks charger, it'll start showing a solid or flashing green light. On bad days, that light may turn into a red one instead. It'll keep flashing red until users unplug the charger or take the battery out.

What does a red light on a GreenWorks battery mean?

Immediately take your Greenworks battery out of its charger if you notice an unchanging red light on it. I'm not overreacting when I say it could lead to serious harm otherwise. A solid red light means the battery currently charging is at unsafe temperatures. Here's what this warning indicator will look like if it ever shows up for you.

What does a green light on a charger mean?

A solid green light means the battery is at 100%. Red lights, on the other hand, are a bad sign when it comes to these chargers. That's because it will only blink red if users put a bad battery on it. I also have a short video about the meaning of Greenworks charger indicator and you can watch it below if you want.

Why is my GreenWorks battery flashing red?

A flashing red light isn't as immediately dangerous as a solid one. However, I'd argue it's even worse to see between the two. The red light will only blink if users put a bad battery on the charger. In other words, if you see the pattern from this picture, your Greenworks battery is likely dead.

What do GreenWorks battery charger lights mean?

Greenworks chargers have an indicator that starts glowing whenever users put a battery inside. That indicator signals important things, like when charging is complete. The symbols on the charger aren't enough for some to understand what each light means. That's why I made this guide on the meaning of Greenworks battery charger lights to help!
